America’s Camp Summer Enrollment Begins

"I will never forget picking Aidan up at camp," recalls Marian Fontana, about her then eight-year-old son. "He ran across the lawn, into my arms, and said, "Mom, it was the best week of my life!'"

It was August, 2004, and Aidan had just finished his first experience at America’s Camp, a one-week sleep-away camp in Lenox, Massachusetts. He spent a week on the playing fields, in the shops, and in and out of the pool and lake. He had also shared a cabin for a week with a group of boys his age. But age wasn’t the only thing they had in common. First, like Aidan, all of his bunkmates had either lost a parent in the 9/11 attacks or had lost a parent in the line of duty at another time. Second, they were all there to have fun and be kids.

The camp is currently enrolling boys and girls, ages 7-15. The 2006 session begins on August 16. The camp is funded by the America’s Camp Foundation, and is provided free of charge to eligible families.

Tribute Gallery Designs Set for Tribute Center

Walking through the galleries that will soon be part of the Tribute Center, visitors will learn stories of tremendous loss and enormous outpouring of compassion and support. "The center will provide a unique opportunity for visitors to find meaning in the many stories of those deeply affected by the events of 9/11," says Wendy Aibel-Weiss, Director of Programs.

The stories visitors will learn by traveling through the center reflect the diversity of people who experienced deep loss and shares voices not often heard in other media. "Putting a "human face" on the events increases visitors’ understanding of the humanity and community that was both lost and found," says Aibel-Weiss.

The Tribute Center is composed of five galleries; four on the main floor and one of the lower level. Each serves a unique purpose in the overall exhibit.

Gallery One: Remembering the World Trade Center Community - Visitors will be introduced to a model of the WTC, along with images, sounds and written quotes that evoke the vitality of the WTC neighborhood.

Gallery Two: 1993 and 2001 Attacks - Using audio clips and some video, this gallery includes a series of timeline units that invite visitors to travel along a 70-foot long hallway and actually “walk through” the events of February 26, 1993 and September 11, 2001. As people walk through the timeline units, a diversity of first hand perspectives will be conveyed through images, quotes, audio and video. Visitors will be able to relate and learn about the experiences of survivors, family members, residents, volunteers and rescue personnel.

Gallery Three: Rescue and Recovery - This area pays tribute to the individuals and organizations that rushed to the site and worked tirelessly for months in often dangerous conditions. Using artifacts and film, this area will help visitors comprehend the profoundly spiritual nature ofground marker for visitors to recognize the reverence of the place. The memorial and museum are both below street level.

On April 11, 2006 the New York Times published new changes regarding the WTC memorial plans: The contemplative centerpiece—on level below the galleries in which the victims’ names are to be inscribed—will be a room at the center of the north tower footprint, almost at bedrock level but open to the sky, with a symbolic masonry vessel at its center. Behind the east wall of this room will be a repository for unidentified remains. Surrounding both rooms will be remnants of the tower’s original perimeter columns. Both features were conceived as part of the memorial, which will be free. The public will now be able to reach this area only through the museum because of the architectural layout. If the museum charges admission, the public will have to pay to visit the contemplation room.

Flight 93 National Memorial Plans Unveiled

On April 10, 2006, family members and the National Park Service who are working together to build the Flight 93 Memorial in Shanksville, PA visited the September 11th Families’ Association. Plans for the memorial in Shanksville were shared in conjunction with representation of the events within the Tribute Center. The Families of Flight 93 formed a nonprofit organization and have a tight support network. They unveiled new plans for the Flight 93 National Memorial, a national park dedicated to the forty passengers and crew members who lost their lives in the crash of United Airlines Flight 93. It will honor these individuals for thwarting the hijackers from their planned attack on a landmark of Washington D.C. on September 11, 2001.

The design, created by Paul Murdoch Architects and Nelson Byrd Woltz Landscape Architects, will offer visitors a natural setting where they can reflect upon the impact of September 11. At the memorial’s heart is the “Sacred Ground” - the crash site and final resting place of the passengers and crew. This area will remain untouched. It will be encircled by a large natural landform called the “Bow.” The Bowl’s perimeter will be lined by forty groves of maple trees - one for each victim lost in the crash. An integral element of the design is the visitors’ center, which planners conceive of as the “educational and interpretive” hub of the memorial.

When completed, the memorial will encompass 2,200 acres. The Families of Flight 93 projects the park will be open to the public by the tenth anniversary of the terrorist attacks. Until then, visitors can access a temporary Flight 93 memorial near Shanksville, PA.

Pentagon & Shanksville Will be Part of Tribute Center

The Tribute Center includes the events from both the Pentagon and Shanksville, PA. The names of victims from both the Pentagon, American Airlines Flight 77 and United Airlines Flight 93 will also be represented in the Tribute Gallery.

of the recovery operations.

Gallery Four: Paying Tribute - This spiritual environment will offer a place for reflection as the names of victims will be projected on a wall, adjoining an area that shares photos of those who were lost.

Gallery Five: World Tribute - Objects and images that reflect the outpouring of support throughout the nation and the world will be exhibited in the lower level.

The process for developing the exhibit has been in the works since 2004 when family members, survivors, rescue and recovery workers, volunteers, residents as well as educators and museum specialists met to review the plans for the exhibition. A planning council contributed to developing broad concepts for each area. To further develop the ideas, an exhibit team composed of museum professionals and designers was hired. "The designer has been hard at work to create welcoming spaces that express the mission and enhance the content," says Aibel-Weiss.

Objects and images to be included in the exhibit will be those that family members, survivors, and recovery workers share with us. Objects are also being borrowed from the collections of the New York State Museum, the Municipal Archives, and the Museum of the City of New York. Images are being borrowed from a variety of collections. "The decision of what to include in each gallery goes back to the mission," says Aibel-Weiss. "We are trying to tell the story from a variety of perspectives, allowing the visitor to relate."

The Tribute Center will open in August of 2006.
n the next year, three movies focusing on different aspects of the events of September 11, 2001 will hit theaters, beginning with "United 93" on April 28, 2006. World Trade Center will be in theaters in August 2006 and "Reign O'er Me" will be released in 2007. As these movies are released, controversial issues will arise along with opinions and mixed feelings about the films among family members of those lost, survivors, and anyone who was personally affected by the attacks.

Each plot addresses the attacks on September 11, 2001 in different ways. "Reign O'er Me" is about a man who lost his family in the September 11 attack on NYC. He is acquainted with his old college roommate who is a psychiatrist and is determined to help him cope with his loss. Rekindling the friendship is the one thing that appears able to help the man recover from his grief. "World Trade Center" tells the story of the heroic survival and rescue of two Port Authority policemen-John McLoughlin and Will Jimeno-who were trapped in the rubble of the WTC on September 11, 2001, after they went in to help people escape. Their story shows how the best in people rose above the tragic events of that day. "United 93" focuses on the passengers and crew, their families on the ground and the flight controllers who watched as United Airlines Flight 93 became the fourth hijacked plane on 9/11. The film attempts to understand the abject fear and courageous decisions of those who, over the course of just 90 minutes, transformed from a random assembly of disconnected strangers into bonded allies who confronted an unthinkable situation.

Whether or not to see these films may be a difficult decision for anyone, but even more so for those who have been personally affected by the events of 9/11. "I will most likely not go see any of these films because it will be too painful," says Clair Dawson, who lost her brother. Linda Pohlmann, who lost her husband, says she will not be heading to the theaters to see these films. "I have my own memories of that day and do not need any film to rekindle them," she says. "They are forever embedded in my mind and will be with me until the day I die." Wanting to learn as much as possible after losing her sister on 9/11, Eleni Kousoulis says she will probably see all three movies. "Ever since 9/11 I have had a need to learn as much as I can about what happened that day and about what the victims of this tragedy went through," she says. "I'm not sure where this need stems from, other than maybe from the fact that nothing of my sister was ever found and I have never really had closure." After losing a close friend on 9/11, John Quinn says he is interested in seeing all three movies, although "Reign O'er Me" appeals to him most. "The fact that the main character is able to deal with his grief because of a rekindled friendship is something very similar to what I went through," he says. "The loss of my friend brought many people I had not seen in years back into my life and restarted a number of friendships. If the film is handled thoughtfully, I think it could be a very valuable film for the public."

Some family members are concerned the movies will exploit the events of 9/11. "In today's world, I wonder how "human" or "sympathetic" they will portray the terrorists," says Pohlmann. Susan Carroll, who lost her son, agrees. "The only people who benefit are those who make the movies and the box offices," she says.

Others feel it's a difficult situation because they do not want the events of 9/11 exploited, but also don't want the public to forget about the largest terrorist attack in American history. Kousoulis feels the films could be beneficial depending on how the stories are told and the tone of the movies. "Hollywood sometimes has the tendency to "over-tell" stories and exaggerate things. If the movies stay down to Earth and realistic, then I think they will be beneficial," she says. Paulie Srinuan, who also lost his sister, believes it is important that the rest of the world know what happened that day, but is also concerned with how the story of the "World Trade Center" movie is told. "Sometimes I am scared that they are just going to make a movie to make a buck and exploit the events of that day," he says. "I'd rather see it as a "catch-22" where it might be beneficial for the public to know the events of that day and always remember." Dawson says the movies can be beneficial for the public. "For people that did not lose a family member or close friend, the movies may show some insight into the time surrounding 9/11," she says. "It wasn't just planes hitting the buildings."

There have been a few changes around our office including saying goodbye to familiar faces and welcoming new staff. Sally Yerkovich, former president of the Tribute Center accepted the position as President for the Fund for Arts and Culture in Central and Eastern Europe, Michael Kuo, former project manager for Tribute, has accepted a similar position with Colgate Development, LLC. Michael's dad, Frederick Kuo, Jr., was killed in the September 11 attacks. Sally and Michael played a critical role in the formation of the Center. We appreciate their hard work and wish them all the best in their future endeavors.

We would like to welcome Tribute's new President Lynn Tierney. Prior to accepting the position, she was the Deputy Commissioner of the New York City Fire Department where she lead the development of the FDNY FireZone in Rockefeller Center, a similar educational visitor center. Tierney also served as a spokesperson for the World Trade Center with the Port Authority for thirteen years.

Wendy Abel-Weiss is the new Director of Programs for the Tribute Center. She has a distinguished background in museum interpretation. She served as the VP for Exhibitions and Education at the Brooklyn Historical Society and over eight years at the Smithsonian’s National Museum of American History.
